Implants are usually associated with plastic surgery, plastic surgeons and breast augmentation. However, implants are also used by dentists.

So, what are dental implants?

They are devices that are placed within the bone to replace missing teeth, to replace a tooth that will retain a bridge, and they are also used to help stabilize dentures that are built over the implants.

What are the benefits of dental implants?

They allow the dentist to create a stable replacement for teeth that are missing without involving the use or preparation of adjacent natural teeth. Also, when used to stabilize a denture, implants give the denture a retentiveness ability that cannot be achieved through other means.

Once Dental Implants are installed, they typically last between fifteen to twenty years or more. If they are taken care of properly, they can last a lifetime.

The implants are made of various metals such as titanium. They may also be made of various ceramic products such as zirconium. The outside surface of the implant can be coated with a different type of material to aid in the bonding of the bone to the implant.

Most people who have missing teeth are ideal candidates for Dental Implants. There are a few rare medical problems that might eliminate a person from being a candidate for implants, but each case, of course, has to be evaluated on an individual
